This agency had its own movie theatres throughout the larger cities of North Korea. It also supervised distribution of Soviet films to Korean theatres.

15. SOKAVA (Soviet Korean Air Association)

Director: Husev, age about 53.

Preparations to establish this association were begun in January or February 1950 but operations were not under way until April. Its function was air passenger transportation for Koreans and Soviets, using twenty C-47 planes manned by Soviet crews. Pyongyang Central Airfield was the base of operations; the main office was located in the former U.S. liaison officer's house.

Flights were made from Pyongyang to Chongjin, Vladivostok, Dairen, Wonsan, Hamhung, and Mukden. Fares were very low, as for example, 1,500 won to Chongjin; 2,500 won to Vladivostok; and 1,500 won to Dairen. It was conjectured that the fares were set in anticipation of the "liberation" of South Korea, when, with surface transport disrupted, SOKAVA would be able immediately to provide cheap and attractive transportation to Seoul, Taegu, and Pusan, thus advancing the prestige of the USSR.

When the Pyongyang airfield was bombed on 27 June 1950, eighteen of the twenty SOKAVA planes were destroyed and twelve Soviet citizens were killed.

16. Churin and Company (Department Store)

* ☐ Comment. Personnel previously reported include the following:

Kovalenko: Ivan G. Kovalenko was formerly with Torgpredstvo in Canton and Lksporkhleb in Hong Kong; he left for North Korea in summer 1949. Positive identification is not possible, however.

Moiseyev: President of Aortrans; ☐ Morozov: Previously reported as First Secretary of the embassy in Pyongyang, in March 1950.
